Yet, ever since the North Sea Continental Shelf cases, the courts have consistently adhered to the model of equity and equitable principles and denied equidistance as a rule of customary law, except for delimitations of the territorial sea. There is still considerable debate about the proper rules for maritime boundary delimitation: should equidistance or equitable principles be applied with a view to achieving an equitable solution?

Analysis of international case-law also shows that the current rule governing maritime delimitation is the 'achievement of an equitable solution' in and of itself. The concept of equity in maritime delimitation is therefore only relevant to the equitability of the 'result' to be reached.
